From the Washington Union, 4th inst. THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE-MILITA-RY CONTRIBUTIONS IN MEXICO.

The previous communications to Congress on this subject by the President have left, as we think, no cause and little excuse for the further call for information contained in Mr. Botts's recent resolution, to which the lucid and conclusive paper published this morning in another column is the President's reply .-But it must certainly be admitted that this present showing of the matter by the whigs has had at least one beneficial result, in that it has given the President an opportunity finally and conclusively to settle before the country this whole question of the military contributions levied and disbursed in Mexico for the support of the war. We apprehend that, after the publication of this message, few politicians of character and standing will be found ministration upon the doctrines of constitutional and international law which it sets forth. Its statements of fact, and its course of President's vindication of the wisdom, the legality, and the high expediency of the policy and plan of military contributions which the administration most successfully adopted. In that they would have to protect themselves, a word, the message, besides settling the ques- and, in a few words, they expressed contion put in issue by Mr. Botts' resolution, ful ly sustains the unsurpassed reputation which the President has won by the whole series of

The President's demonstration of the rightfulness and legality of the military contribu tions, as levied and disbursed by his orders in the ports of Mexico, for the support of the war during its continuance, rests, as we understand it from a rapid perusal of the message, mainly upon the following propositions all of which, as we think, are indisputable: 1st. That, by the constitution, the Presiden is made commander-in-chief of the army and be faithfully executed;"

2d. That Congress having, by the act of termination;"

3d. That Congress having forborne to prescribe the special acts of war by which the war was to be so prosecuted, it became the various modes of conducting the war, which that code sanctions, those which, with the best means placed at his disposal, were deem-the war and weakening the enemy's power and resources, the levying and disbursing of military contributions for the support of the war in his ports or his territory, is not only fully settled and well recognised by the law of nations, and by the usages of the civilized world, but oftentimes, in the case of a foreign war, becomes an indispensable element in the military policy of an invading army.

We do not see which of these propositions of the military contributions in question. But it has been maintained that the collections of taxes on imports in the ports of Mexico, by what is a military contribution if it be not the seizure, by military power, for military pu poses, of the enemy's public revenue in its military rule prescribing beforehand the circumstances and the amount or proportion of the seizure?
